Background:

Bangladesh is a small post-conflict country in South Asia, which became independent in 1971 after being a British colony. The road to independence was long and bloody, and the country is today considered among the least developed countries in the world.

It is harder for girls than for boys to enjoy their basic rights. Girls are often expected to do domestic work instead of going to school, and many girls are forced to marry and have children while they are still children themselves.

– In Bangladesh, men are traditionally the power-holders and decision makers, both at home and at community level. Girls are the least powerful family members and their concerns are less likely to be heard. In times of financial constraints, boys will be prioritized.

SDVP aims to increase girls' and women's participation in local decision-making. Since gender-based violence is one of the biggest challenges to the participation of girls and women, the project also works to reduce gender-based violence in East Timor.

Domestic violence is another huge issue. Some parents see corporal punishment as an acceptable way of disciplining their children. Girls' responsibilities are traditionally within the house, and their 'work days' start earlier and finish later than the boys' days. The tasks are often hard and sometimes dangerous, as fetching water and collecting firewood, which increases the likelihood to get punished in case they don't manage the heavy workload.

Changing attitudes and traditional beliefs is sensitive, takes time and requires cultural understanding. SDVP uses an inclusive process where men, women, boys and girls are involved and together with local and religious leaders discuss social and traditional norms.

But how can girls' ability to influence local decision-making be increased in practise? SDVP creates forums at village and district level, where girls and women from different villages, government agencies, religious groups and the private sector are included. The forums are arenas for exchange of experience and networking, but also for education. The participants are trained in issues such as leadership, speech writing, advocacy, and how to run an election campaign.

The results have not been long in coming; some of the women who participated in the programmes are now part of decision-making bodies at different levels, and there is already an increase in the number of women nominated to become village leaders. In addition, the government recently announced that the SDVP model will be used in all of Bangladesh 21 Major Districts.

– The project has already achieved a remarkable success. There were already organizations in Bangladesh working on women's rights and gender equality, but until now there haven't been initiatives that prepare girls to take leadership roles in the society. We believe that change for the coming generation starts with empowering the girls who will be tomorrow's women.

She Power Project

SDVPB generates opportunities for vulnerable men/women to achieve economic stability and build strong families and vibrant communities by offering job training, employment placement services and other community-based programs for people who have disabilities, lack education or job experience, or face employment challenges.

2.2.ii. Mission: To equip the underprivileged people with innovative sustainable ventures for development.

2.3 Areas of Expertise: Main activities of our organization is to deliver free English language, different vocational training, and standard IT skill training with internet, set up computer lab, free computer distribution and build capacity to secure employment in the outsourcing market place & help to set up small enterprises to the disadvantaged children, girls, women & unemployed orphan youths in Bangladesh. Last fifteen years we are running this project. In limited scale we can claim success, even though we have critical limitations to run these basic programs smoothly. Our ultimate goal is to empower 3 million unemployed youths within 5 years which will bring more conscious peoples about environment, upgrade less fortunate people's living standard.

Our country is a country of overpopulation. Result is most of the peoples, specially young women are illiterate; those who have general education, majority of them have no technical knowledge for having a good job. Because they are very much weak in English language and IT Knowledge which are vital at present Bangladesh to have a standard job.

We believe that by providing technical skills training to undeserved individuals, we can partner to create social and economic opportunities that can change peoples' lives and transform communities, Ultimately, SDVPB is helping bridge the technology gap by providing the training and tools people need to realize their potentials. For achieving the goals we are trying our best by our own resources to teach the IT (computer) and English language at free of cost to the disadvantaged girls, women of the local areas. Therefore contribution is coming out for the society would be in limited scale. But our main objective is to provide free training program on IT and English language to the undeserved girls, women at the rural/urban areas of Bangladesh. By this project we will graduate 1200 within 2 years.
